Operating Context

Market Dynamics

The industry is expected to record positive growth in the coming years. The Indian Government is actively drafting strategies to improve the contribution of textiles in the export. Additionally, by 2030, the Indian textile industry is anticipated to reach a total production size of USD 250 billion.

Several factors are driving the growth of the Indian innerwear industry

The abundant availability of raw materials in the country supports the growth and development of the industry, facilitating expansion by improving productive efficiency and reducing input costs.

In 2024, the Ministry of Textiles approved 18 research and development projects across key strategic areas, including sustainable textiles. This is a significant growth opportunity for the industry, bolstering innovation and enhancing operational excellence.

Opportunities for Lux

Product Diversification: Capitalise on the growing demand for specialised innerwear categories like activewear, shapewear, and seamless innerwear.

Expansion into New Markets: Explore by expanding its reach beyond its current domestic market by targeting potential export opportunities.

Focus on Innovation: Investing in Research and development to create innovative and differentiated innerwear products

Manufacturing Capabilities

Ability to consistently deliver high quality products on timely basis

Demonstrated manufacturing excellence for over 3 decades

Flexible core manufacturing process
